The Seeds of God's Kingdom

11th Sunday in Ordinary Time

The first parable in this week's gospel, of the seed that grows by itself without the sower knowing how, is unique to Mark. Despite its polyvalent meaning, it is a clear call to hope, patience and readiness. It likens God's kingdom to a man scattering seed upon the ground and, after the seed grows of its own accord, the man starts to reap the harvest when the crop is ready. The more familiar parable of the mustard seed follows immediately. In this case, God's kingdom is likened to a tiny mustard seed which produces a great tree. Australians are all too familiar with the hard work and patient faith associated with farming. Beyond planting the seed, watering and fertilising, the farmer must rely on the unseen work of God in transforming tiny seeds into a rich harvest, and thus possess a spirit of gratitude and trust in God's work.

Mark's gospel reveals that Jesus spoke to the crowds in parables, but that he only revealed the hidden meaning of these parables to the disciples. One wonders why Jesus would not have explained the parables to the crowds as well. Later in the same chapter Jesus tells his disciples, "The secret of the kingdom of God is given to you, but to those who are outside everything comes in parables, so that they may see and see again, but not perceive; may hear and hear again, but not understand; otherwise they might be converted and be forgiven." While it seems strange that Jesus would want to preclude those on the outside from being forgiven or converted, this reveals much about the community for whom Mark was writing - a community who was being persecuted and who formed bonds even stronger than family ties.'
