Journey to Jerusalem (Part 2)

This Sunday's gospel begins with two geographical notices. First, Luke indicates that 'Jesus was on the way to Jerusalem' (Sunday 13); we will return to the significance of this in a moment.
Second, he travelled through Samaria and Galilee. The Greek text reads, 'he travelled through the region between Samaria and Galilee'. Many Bibles translate it as 'along the border between Samaria and Galilee'. Quite literally, the lepers whom Jesus encounters there are marginalised, pushed to the edge; they are in 'no man's land'. While this is true of all lepers, it is particularly true of one of them, later identified as a Samaritan. He is an outcast among outcasts. But just as 'the Good Samaritan' became a model of compassion and service (Sunday 15), the Samaritan in this gospel is a model of faith and gratitude.

Jesus is journeying to Jerusalem. In the narrative the apostles, disciples, and crowd have receded to the background. Luke is focusing on Jesus. Just as his journey will end in Jerusalem, this episode ends with Jesus pronouncing that the Samaritan leper has been saved. The ultimate end of this journey is salvation.

Jerusalem is the city where the Saviour accomplishes his mission of salvation.
Luke, who has promised his readers an orderly narrative, prepares for this climax with a presentation of Jesus' ministry in three stages: it begins in Galilee, moves south to Samaria, and attains its goal in Judea and Jerusalem. The events of Jesus' passion and resurrection occupy chapters 23-24. Acts of the Apostles tells the story of the preaching of the gospel which retraces in reverse order this same route: it begins in Jerusalem, moves out to Judea and Samaria, reaches Galilee, and will not stop until it reaches the 'ends of the earth' which, in this geographical scheme, is Rome. This Sunday's episode begins the third and final part of Jesus'
'exodus that he was going to accomplish in Jerusalem' (Lent 2).
