Resurrection

32nd Sunday in Ordinary Time

Belief in an afterlife arose very late in the Old Testament, and even in New Testament times such a belief was not universal. The Sadducees in this Sunday's gospel reject the notion of survival beyond death. The traditional view maintained that the human person is identified with the physical body which is animated by the breath of God (Gen 2:7; 'breath' does not mean 'soul'). Death is final: 'When you take away their breath, they perish and return to the dust from which they came' (Ps 104:29). The only thing that survives death is a person's name. Thus, one's only shot at 'immortality' is a son who bears the father's name. Therefore, Deuteronomy 25:56 provided for 'levirate marriage': if a man died without a son, the deceased man's brother was required to marry the widow; the first son born of that union was considered the dead man's son who bore his name and inherited his property.

'Resurrection of the body' as the way to survive death is a logical consequence of Jewish belief. For Jews the human body is identified with the person; thus, if a person were to live beyond death the body must be restored: hence, resurrection of the body. By contrast Greeks believed that a person is made of body and soul. The soul was immortal and was trapped in the body until death when it was freed and lived on. Both the Jewish and Greek solutions to the problem of death and immortality are found in the Bible.

The Sadducees propose to Jesus an extreme case: the pattern of childlessness and death is repeated seven times. If there were a resurrection of the dead, would the wife have seven husbands in the afterlife? They thought the very absurdity of the situation proved the foolishness of the belief. Jesus dismissed the Sadducees' argument. Because resurrection means life, there is no need for sons to carry on the family name. With no need for sons, there was no need for marriage in the Age to Come. The absurdity of multiple marriages doesn't disprove resurrection; resurrection makes remarriage unnecessary.
