Being Fed and Feeding Others THIRD SUNDAY OF EASTER

This Sunday's gospel has two scenes: the miraculous catch of fish which ends with Jesus feeding the disciples; the questioning of Peter which ends with his being commissioned to feed others. Both episodes have connections with earlier episodes in the Gospel of John.

This episode of feeding with bread and fish recalls Jesus' feeding a crowd of five thousand with five loaves and two fish. Both events take place near the lake of Tiberius. In both stories the same Greek words for 'bread' and 'fish' are used; in both Jesus 'took and gave' the food. Both stories stress abundance: in John 6, there were 'twelve wicker baskets with fragments' left over; in John 21 there were so many fish in the net that the disciples could not pull it into the boat and so had to drag it to shore. These stories also recall the abundance of wine at Cana. In all three stories the abundance discloses some aspect of the identity of Jesus: at Cana, his glory is revealed; at the multiplication of the loaves, the people exclaim, 'This is truly the prophet' whom they want to make 'king'; and at the miraculous catch of fish the beloved disciple announces, 'It is the Lord'. In all the stories Jesus provides for others: he is the source of abundance.

The second half of this Sunday's gospel recalls John 10 in which Jesus describes himself as the Good Shepherd who cares for his sheep. These are the only two episodes that deal with shepherds. Just as last Sunday's gospel shows Jesus sending the disciples as he himself had been sent, in this gospel Jesus commands Peter to do as he himself has done: to care for the sheep. As Jesus lays down his life for the sheep, so Peter would also glorify God by his death.

The similarities between the pre- and post-Resurrection stories remind us that it is the same Jesus at work in both and that the entire gospel is told from the perspective of Easter faith.
