Infancy and Passion

Especially so close to Christmas, the second reading from Hebrews is jarring. As we prepare to celebrate the birth of Jesus, the letter to the Hebrews speaks of his death. This passage begins, however, with two references to his birth: when Christ came into the world and 'prepared a body for me'. Why did Christ come? Why did he take on a human body? The answer: 'I am coming to obey your will'. Through obedience to the will of God, Jesus established a new covenant. Obedience is the key: the extent of obedience is demonstrated by his death on the cross. This connection between the birth of Jesus and his obedience unto death is integral to the Christmas festival. In the annunciation Mary responds to the words of Gabriel by saying, 'I am the handmaid of the Lord. May it be done to me according to your word'. By obediently submitting to the divine word, she puts her body at the disposal of God: 'you will conceive in your womb and bear a son, and you will name him Jesus'. Submission to God's will makes possible the birth that will lead to salvation. The birth of the Messiah and the death of the Saviour are inseparable.

Elizabeth's question to Mary is really a proclamation of faith: 'Why should I be honoured with a visit from the mother of my Lord?' The reference to Jesus as 'Lord' is an Easter title, indicating that Luke is telling the initial episodes of the gospel in view of the entire story. The resurrection is not a surprise ending: it is where the story really begins and the vantage point from which the gospel is proclaimed. The story of the birth of Jesus cannot be separated from the story of his death. Christ was born for a purpose: 'I am coming to obey your will, O God'. Birth leads to death as surely as death leads to life.
