Jesus Commissions the Apostles

THE ASCENSION OF THE LORD

Biblical scholars have long noted that Mark 16:15-20 is not an original part of Mark's gospel. The entire 'Longer Ending' (16:9-20) was added to provide a more satisfying conclusion than that found in 16:1-8. Most of the material in this longer ending reiterates stories from Luke 24 and John 20. Nevertheless, these verses provide an appropriate ending to Mark's gospel.

Mark began his gospel with Jesus 'proclaiming the gospel,' calling people to 'repent and believe'. The gospel ends with Jesus sending out disciples to 'proclaim the gospel,' calling people to 'believe and [be] baptised'. Throughout the gospel disciples and people in general struggled to understand and to believe Jesus.
But now that Jesus has been raised and his identity as the Son of God has been confirmed by his death & resurrection, the urgency of believing is spelled out: belief and baptism lead to salvation, but failure to believe leads to condemnation. Such ultimate consequences explain the urgency that the disciples 'proclaim the gospel to every creature.'

Just as Jesus had performed many signs, expelled demons, and laid his hands on the sick, the disciples will now do the same. The expectation that disciples would perform signs similar to those of Jesus is reflected in other New Testament sources. The purpose of these signs is not to exalt the status of the individual disciple or apostle, but to bear visible witness to the power and presence of Jesus at work in those who believe. Like the deeds of Jesus, such signs point to the emerging triumph of God's reign; they are 'first fruits' of the resurrection, that is, the wholeness and fullness of life that is signified by the resurrection is already being manifest when the power of evil is broken and the sick are made well. But the deepest significance of the disciples' performing these signs is that they are continuing to do as Jesus had done: though Jesus has ascended to heaven, his work continues in the work of those who believe in him.

Dear Parishioners

Could I please ask for strong parishioners to help me move some marble?

10am Saturday 22nd May Bega Church.

I would like to see if a shrine to Mary and St Joseph might be able to be pieced together in the Bega Church.

(If any parishioners have some of the original Marble from the altar please let me know).

Peace Fr Luke
