I trust, I shall not fear.
For the Lord is my strength, my song,

CONSULTATION FOR WOMEN OF THE ARCHDIOCESE

The second, 'Consultation for Women of the Archdiocese' was held on Saturday 1 December. The meeting began with acknowledgement of country which was something some felt should take place before all masses in the Archdiocese. A summary of the first consultation held on 8 September was discussed at length. Again we were asked 'Why had we come'. We studied various photos of the 'Visitation of Mary to Elizabeth' from Luke's gospel and pondered what gift this represented to each of us. We were asked what our level of satisfaction was with the review topics:- Church, Governance, Inclusion, Education and Faith formation. After extensive examination our submissions to the Plenary Council 2020 were decided upon. We were reminded that we could forward our own submissions if not totally in agreement with the proposals. Over 2,000 submissions have been forwarded already from other sources. The constraints of Canon Law was a major concern throughout our discussions. A history of the Archdiocese of Canberra & Goulburn Commission for Women Program 2007-2016 was also given. There had been slow and poor response initially with limited voluntary commitment in 2007. We were asked what bold vision can we develop for Archdiocesan women's groups, how it might operate and who would be involved. This was another fruitful and thought-provoking gathering for women of the Archdiocese.

CONGRATULATIONS

Sr Kate McMahon received a 50 years Archbishop Erin O'Brien award for her service as a Catechist at the Annual Catechists Mass.

MAKE STRAIGHT THE PATHS OF JOY

Our joy as Christians cannot be contained. It must not be restrained. The penitential always gives way to the salvific. That's the only point of our penance: to make our path straight for rejoicing, to liberate us from the sadness. Sadly, I think the penance, the preparation Advent most demands of us Christians these days is to learn anew to be joyful and to learn again to share our joy with others. Please! Christians! Your joy is what's demanded of you – instead of all that plaintive sermonising against the commercialisation and materialism of the secular Christmas or all that anxious news commentary on how stressful a time Christmas is for people. Christians cannot oppose the world's misdirected 'spirit of Christmas' with some kind of sober sadness or any kind of preaching guilt-trip. They must oppose it with their joy.

What is the source of our joy? Exactly the good news being celebrated, sung, spread and proclaimed in our readings: God has come to be with us. And God shall come again so that we may be with him forever. And not only us, for 'all shall see the salvation of God'. This is no mere clap-trap, no happy-clappy God delusion. It's not any 'spirit' of Christmas, it is Christmas.

We Christians are not unaware of or untouched by the sadness, the suffering and the pain in human lives. Sorrow and distress are not absent from our wardrobes. We don't so much hide it away as we put all that in its proper place. And it is not that our faith does not motivate us to make our world a better place. We can ask, as anyone might, why, despite the best efforts of men and women of good will, there is still war, hunger, sickness, loneliness and all manner of sorrow in our world, but we cannot say, as others might, that God does not know or that God does not care.

In Christ Jesus God has manifested the depth of his care for us. God is with us and God wants us to be with him forever.

For some that's not enough. Perhaps they want Father Christmas to bring them other gifts. Don't begrudge or be scrooge those who have a different wish list this Advent and Christmas. Respect those who don't see the Father's gift of his Son as the greatest of all gifts. But since we Christians believe that it is, we must show it. We must show ourselves to be the very opposite of a sad people. We must make St. Paul's words our own: 'Every time I pray for all of you, I pray with joy...'

SURE AND CERTAIN HOPE

Second Sunday of Advent.

Fr Richard Conrad OP preaches on

St Paul's hope and love for his fellow Christians.

'I am sure that he who began a good work in you will bring it to completion at the Day of Jesus Christ.' With these words, St. Paul expresses his hope for his friends at Philippi.

St. Thomas Aquinas recognised a drive called 'hope' in animals, a drive that energises you to tackle something important, but difficult, yet possible. The kind of drive aroused when the bull is chasing you, and it's not beyond you to make it to the fence and scramble over. This drive can be brash, and subject to miscalculation, hence it is strong in young men and drunkards. The hope St. Paul expressed is a much higher - a divine - drive, a 'theological virtue', a God-given strength energising the most important project of all, the journey into God's own bliss. This hope cannot be brash; it does not presume on God's friendship as something due to us, for friendship must be received as a gift. The journey would be quite beyond us, were not Jesus the Way, were not the Holy Spirit our Paraclete, our Friend for the campaign. For a creature cannot seize knowledge of the God who alone possesses being, and is out of all proportion to us who receive being.

So is our hope a miscalculation? True, we are drunk on the Spirit; true, in the Anima Christi we ask Christ's blood to intoxicate us. But St. Paul says hope does not disappoint us, St. Thomas says it is marked by a certainty. God has begun a good work in us. We were created in the image of the Holy Trinity, needing the Holy Trinity - and Father, Son and Spirit have shown us Their eagerness to meet the need they gave us.

In due time, Jesus dwelt among us revealing the Father who sent him. Throughout history he has come to birth in the minds of God's friends, purifying our vision with a share in the wisdom that he is. So we can hope that the Father will once again send his Son to our souls, after death, for him to 'blow our minds' and make us able to know his Father! We can hope that the Father will once again send his Son, on the Last Day, to complete his work of bringing us into the divine Glory.

As the result of Jesus's sacrifice, the Father sent the Spirit to energise the Church. Throughout history he has been sent to God's friends, to 'enlarge our hearts' with a share in the love that he is. So we can hope that after death, and on the Last Day, the Spirit will complete his work of enabling us to embrace the Father, and enfolding us in the divine Glory that he is.

St. Paul can see that the Philippians have the mind of Christ and are attuned to the Spirit. So, while he urges them to grow further in Christ's perspective and in love, he hopes with a divine certainty that their grace will grow into glory. For the hope God has given me, energises me - but Paul is so much one with his friends in Christ, so much animated with the same Spirit, that their growth is his, and his is theirs. Common prayer expresses this common hope: Paul prays for his friends, and asks for their prayers. We do not pray for each other as if doubting God's power and purpose to save. Rather, we express our solidarity with God's purpose, we share his thirst for all his children to share his bliss. By inspiring our prayer, God makes us his fellow-workers, ministers for the completion of the work he has begun. We admit that we can lose Christ's perspective, offend against love. Even in times of sin we must hope - and therefore pray - for God to restore wisdom and charity. But Paul can see the Philippians held secure in that love, that loyalty, that casts out fear of separation from God. So he prays, and urges them to pray, with joy, without anxiety.

There is, St. Thomas says, a fear of the Lord that goes with hope. This reverence and awe before the God on whom we depend for our very being will remain on the Day of Jesus Christ. For then we shall see how wondrous is the work of creation, how more wondrous the work of grace, and with what divine genius the Holy Trinity has brought this work to completion.
