How proud am I to be Australian?

I am deeply loyal and proud of the country I was born nearly 65 years ago. As boy from the bush, that loyalty and sometimes has needed to be tempered. Like the football team we support, parochialism can be caught up in one-eyed views, seeing red, the raw deal my lot gets etc. All this is good to a point. We know this can lead to even deep bitterness. Even as religious leader, over the years dealing with so many events, so many things aren’t black and white. I have strong views on saying the Church is the home of all people no matter their background. As Pope Francis said, ‘it is a hospice for the sick.’

This is where we need to be able to stop, to listen, to hear one another. No country has ever been perfect. Whether we got it wrong or right in the referendum last year the majority was clear. In fairness, we still have a long way to go in acknowledging our indigenous brothers and sisters.

In the meantime, it would be nice to get on celebrating the country we live in. What right do 81 councils around Australia have to hold their people at ransom in deciding they will not be celebrating Australia Day? Why shouldn’t we have citizenship day on this our Australian National holiday? Why should Woollies, Bunnings and Aldi take it on themselves to say they won’t sell Australia Day memorabilia this year? But who cares? These huge franchises justify their bullying by forever boasting about the best deals on offer. Their specials come from squeezing producers to the point where they can’t even cover their costs. Bunnings is great value! How much of what is sold in their stores comes from exploiting people who are vastly underpaid in poorer countries offshore from Australia?

You can be assured, it is not the people who give great service in these shops who will unfairly be at the wrath of other disgruntled Australians. No, these decisions are made by a few big fat cats that sit in highchairs drinking lattes and watching boats sail below on the waters of Sydney Harbour.

We need to remember what built and makes this country so lucky before we have blown it all. Remember those who stayed on after their time as convicts and the toil they put in. Remember the explorers who opened up the inland – not to mention those game enough to go and live in the wilderness. Remember the men and women who fought for this country so we could have what has long been unique. The list goes on. Dwell on it and be grateful. Let us be unified, and in faith – remember that in those Irish brought here in chains that nothing could stop the Christian faith which many today have abandoned.

Don’t worry about a Woollies flag! When the time comes put your Akubra on, a bit of zinc for the nose, your Jackie Howe singlet and fire the BBQ up. It’s a day for those who were here before us, for us who arrived late, and for those who have just arrived.

Fr Mark’s Jokes:

Good News and Bad News: An old man visits his doctor and after thorough examination the doctor tells him: “I have good news and bad news; what would you like to hear first?” Patient: “Well, let me have the bad news first.” Doctor: “You have cancer. I estimate that you have about two years left.” Patient: “Oh no! That’s just awful! In two years my life will be over! What kind of good news could you probably tell me, after this?” Doctor: “You also have Alzheimer’s. In about three months you are going to forget everything I told you.”
